We take refuge in the fact that people disagree about the causes of hunger and the necessary strategies for ending it. We act like ending hunger is an ethical option rather than a moral obligation.

We deceive ourselves by making up excuses why we can't do more. We rationalise that 'it is the responsibility of the government to act,' or that 'since the problem is so large, there is little if anything I can do.' We excuse ourselves by praying for the hungry even as we regularly eat excessively and consume far more than we really need.

We seem totally ensnared by our chosen cultural standards of living and cannot escape the prisons of our affluence.

We will then have twelve and a half more years in the second half to seize life over death for the remaining 400 million.
